Great Ships of the World, Part 2 War and Peace

The name Lusitania still reverberates around the world. Few remember her design or the four giant Parsons turbines that gave her greater speed than her predecessors. Or the fact that she was the winner of the Blue Riband, making the Trans-Atlantic crossing in less than five days.

Her gilded fixtures and wood paneling are a faded image. What lives long in our memory is that she rests on the bottom of the sea along with 1,198 souls, sinking within 18 minutes of being hit by a German torpedo.

Controversy still surrounds the event. Why had Lusitania's captain not maintained maximum speed or zigzagged as ordered? Was the vessel carrying wartime materiel along with her unsuspecting passengers? Or were they all just ordinary citizens caught up in the crosshairs of war? Whatever the truth, this event signaled a start of a new era for ships. It was May 7, 1915.

The Queen Mary, June 20, 1945, arriving into New York with thousands of US troops from European battles.

Called Into Service

Ocean liners were now being converted to military ships, sporting coats of battle-ship gray paint. Some were even camouflaged including Mauritania, which had a diamond-pattern paint-job. Never very efficient because they burned more coal than military vessels, they served their nations well, nonetheless. Their hulls were reinforced and outfitted for weapons. Port-holes were painted black and all running lights switched off. These liners also served as hospital ships and troop ships ferrying men to the front lines.

Captains carried sealed orders for actions they were to take should war break out. What once were only vessels caught up in a challenge for passenger load and speed records, now faced off as enemies at war. When the last gun was silenced, a company like Cunard had lost 22 ships, more than half its total tonnage. This sad chapter was finally brought to a close.

The Statue of Liberty Beckons

With the European continent in ruin, immigrants turned their backs on their homelands. Driven by desperation and hope for a better life, they packed the below-decks steerage compartments. Within a week, they could stand on American shores. A month or more brought them to New Zealand and Australia. The majority of these immigrants sailed past Lady Liberty then walked haltingly through the bureaucracy of Ellis Island. Twelve million arrived from 1892 to 1924. Ships had a new calling.

In the early 1920s, the public renewed its interest in ships. But American ships lost business to foreign carriers during Prohibition when it was forbidden for them to serve alcohol. The European vessels even offered overnight cruises from New York for $10 per person where the liquor flowed and a good time was had by all. Some historians identify these "booze cruises" as the inception of cruising as we know it today for they ultimately extended up to voyages of seven days or more.

A New Day Dawns

The end of the 1920s saw the Flapper, economic ups and downs and the introduction of superliners like the 43,000-ton Ile de France, which carried 1,786 passengers. Travelers donned their finery and took to the seas. Ship architects designed public spaces with soaring ceilings and shimmering chandeliers, replicating the world's finest hotels.

Italy, Holland, Germany, England, America and France each put a unique signature on its ships. The Queen Mary, Normandie, Rex, Conte di Savoia and others all featured something revolutionary – indoor pools, telephones, greenhouses, fresh flowers, larger promenade decks, production shows, famous entertainers and more.

The Depression took a toll on everything, ships included. One called St. Louis made sad history when she was refused permission to disembark her Jewish refugees in Havana. The winds of war began to blow cold again. Soldiers were being relocated around the world as nations prepared for war, transported usually by ship. On September 3, 1939, Britain's Athenia was torpedoed then sank below the seas taking 112 to their watery grave.

World War II brought a halt to recreational cruising. Ships had become huge targets. The Queen Elizabeth slipped out of port in the dark of night, ultimately bound for New York according to sealed orders. German bombers flew over the Solent where they suspected she would be en route to Southampton. The British had purposely planted misinformation about her destination, and the Queen was able to steam on to American shores with only 400 crew members rather than the requisite 1,296.

Ultimately, luxurious liners were stripped of their comforts to accommodate up to 15,000 soldiers. The Queen Mary transported 16,683 on one voyage alone in July 1943. Sadly, many great liners were lost in battle.

When the war ended, ships provided transport for returning troops, war brides, and refugees. Prosperity set the world back on its feet and another era began for ship travel. Once again, people skipped up the gangways bound for exotic destinations while enjoying all that ships could offer. The only dark cloud now on the horizon was a shadow in the shape of an airplane. It, too, would irrefutably affect ship travel forever.

Keeping Our World Crystal Clean

How do Crystal ships handle sewage?

Sewage, or "black-water" as we refer to it aboard ships, flows to a collection tank and is then pumped into Marine Sanitation Devices (MSD) where it is treated. The Marine Sanitation Devices are certified in accordance with U.S. regulations. This biological sewage treatment system is very similar in operation to the municipal wastewater treatment plants in many U.S. cities.

The waste is processed in the MSD to reduce the solids and disinfect the effluent. This treated blackwater is either retained in storage tanks for disposal ashore or discharged overboard according to the very strict guidelines below.

In terms of discharge, Crystal strives to exceed environmental regulations. The municipal wastewater treatment plants of many cities discharge into coastal waters. By national and international regulations, ships cannot discharge treated effluent within three miles of the coast. The cruise industry's standard is to not discharge within four miles from shore. Crystal Cruises, however, has adopted a policy that we will not discharge less than 12 miles from shore. Crystal applies the same 12-mile discharge policy to graywater, which is water collected separately from sinks, showers, tubs and similar sources.

Crystal Love Stories Contest Winner

Crystal Cruises' first-ever Facebook contest recently wrapped after three months and hundreds of stories submitted. Launched on Valentine's Day, the Crystal Love Stories Contest invited our past guests (Crystal Society members) to write 100-500 word essays sharing personal experiences on board and ashore that related to the theme of "love." Whether about romantic travel memories, Crystal Adventures®, pampering service, cuisine, spa, learning experiences, entertainment, or just a magical moment, the guest's "love story" had to involve a past cruise(s) with Crystal. Via a combination of public voting & a judging panel, the field was ultimately narrowed to five finalists, from which one winner was chosen: Claudia Ferris, of Vancouver, British Columbia, whose prize-winning story earned her a free Crystal cruise for two. Please enjoy her love-ly tale...

Crystal Symphony, somewhere down the coast of Chile, January 2011

I can feel his eyes on me; I can almost hear his thoughts amidst peals of laughter and the merry clinking of wine glasses. As the food and wine extravaganza draws to an end, my heart flutters in anticipation of what this magical evening has yet to offer.

Leaving The Vintage Room, the soulful sounds of the Crystal Sextet beckon. He reaches for my hand and, without a word, leads me to the Starlite dance floor where we suddenly find ourselves cheek-to-cheek, small steps, hearts in sync.

As the last notes of Lady in Red fade away, he looks into my eyes and says: "How about a drink? Let's find a quiet place." The Avenue Saloon, its mood evocative of Bogart and Bergman, is the perfect background for Mark the piano man, his nimble fingers seeming to float above the keys as he sings softly, almost to himself. Glasses of pink champagne appear discreetly and we talk; we talk about dreams and hopes, favorite movies and books, places we've been to and places we yearn to see. It feels like we've known each other forever and a day.

After a while I suggest we go for a walk. A warm, strong breeze carries the briny scent of the ocean and a hazy cloud drifts lazily across the vanilla moon. As we stroll around the Promenade Deck, his jacket draped around my shoulders, he points out the Southern Cross and I suddenly realize that in this part of the world colors seem brighter, emotions more intense.

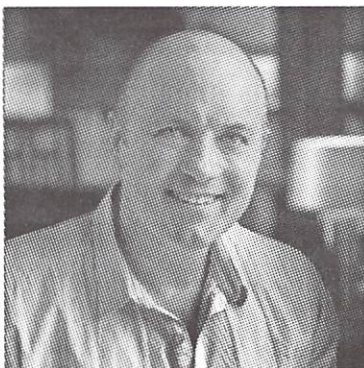

The hour is late but I really don't want this evening to end so in my best Lauren Bacall impersonation I turn to him and say: "How about we go in and ... get comfortable?" He looks at me and says, "Honey, shouldn't we call home and see how the kids are doing first?"

PERSONALITY PROFILES

USC Digital Filmmaking Instructors Kerry Millerick & Dina Sterr

Kerry Millerick is a "multi-hyphenate." He's worked in front of and behind the camera. Starting as a cameraman, he became a correspondent and bureau chief for the CBS affiliate in Miami, where he interviewed three U.S. Presidents and pioneered using TV cameras in the courtroom. Moving to Los Angeles, he appeared in a daily feature news segment on CBS.

From writing sitcoms to directing documentaries, he's worked in Hollywood for over three decades. He was a regular on NBC's Real People. A member of the Director's Guild, he directed thousands of comedy bits for ABC's America's Funniest People. He produced Modern Marvels documentaries on the History Channel. He won an Emmy Award for outstanding writing for a Disney Channel show, Spaceship Earth. For the past 20 years, Kerry's also been working with NASA scientists. As a tech teacher/media trainer, he teaches rocket scientists to explain complex subjects in a media-friendly fashion.

Question: What do the Rolling Stones, David Letterman and Pope John Paul II all have in common?

Answer: Dina Sterr worked with all three during her wild & wonderful entertainment career spanning over 30 years. From the 1984 World's Fair, to beauty pageants, to award shows, her path took exciting twists and turns. Originally from a small Wisconsin town, she made her way to Hollywood and found herself working on shows as varied as the Oscars, the Salt Lake City Winter Olympics and Liberty Weekend. Dina was the first female to produce a Super Bowl Halftime Show, which was soon followed by a return engagement. She's been twice nominated for an Emmy for the Hollywood Christmas Parade. Throughout the years, Dina has called upon her creative talents as a visual storyteller. She will incorporate her skills as a producer, director, and editor to help bring your creative vision to life.

Cruise Sales Consultant, Nikki Andrew

Cruise Sales Consultant Nikki Andrew joined Crystal Cruises and was delighted to become part of this exciting cruise line that has gained such an excellent reputation within the cruising industry.

Born in Lusaka, Zambia, (her father was an officer in the British Overseas Service) Nikki was raised in the North of England, where she still resides when on vacation.

Her first tentative step aboard ships was as Beauty Salon Manager. She enjoyed life at sea so much she looked for a little diversity and was shortly thereafter promoted to Hotel Director's Assistant before electing a few years later to join Shore Excursion Department where she was Manager for the next five years. With so many years of worldwide traveling to so many different ports, Nikki is proud to be able to use that knowledge in her present position as Cruise Sales Consultant to start the next cruise booking for guests presently sailing aboard the beautiful Crystal Symphony.

Helping guests with future cruise selections and advising ways to save on upcoming voyages is part of Nikki's daily routine. "I thoroughly enjoy my very interesting field of work and being able to pass on information and ideas about upcoming itineraries is extremely rewarding. "There are so many fabulously exciting and differing port destinations worldwide that Crystal Symphony and our sister ship, Crystal Serenity, sail to & it is my pleasure to be able to assist our guests in their choice of a future Crystal voyage."

You can find Nikki at her "open walled office" in the Crystal Plaza, Deck 5 Midship, on the starboard side, with her daily desk hours listed each day on the back page of the daily Reflections. She encourages you to start your next Crystal Cruise booking here on board to ensure your special "Onboard Booking Saving" is applied to any future Crystal Cruise selection. Unless you specify otherwise your home travel agent will automatically receive credit for your booking and handle all onward arrangements for you once you are home. Please watch TV Channel 32 to view future Crystal Cruises itineraries and learn about the ways you can make savings on your next voyage with us.

Reverend Michael Lawlor

Reverend Michael Lawlor has been a Catholic priest for thirty-three years. He has served in parish work the entire time.

He is currently pastor of Saint Joseph Church in Needham, Massachusetts. Relating to his work he says: "It is amazing how experiences on a given day can change so rapidly.

You might be celebrating a funeral Mass in the morning, and by afternoon find yourself visiting grade 2 in our elementary school. There is sadness and joy, and it is part of each of our lives. God will always give us the help we need. It is a joy to serve Him and His people."
